"Every child is an artist. The problem is staying an artist once you grow up."

- Pablo Picasso

It is easy to talk about my family and future plans. I know what I want and how I am going to get it; however, my reasoning usually seems blurry. Simple questions about myself are difficult to answer. All I know is that I love my family and friends. If you ask me something about myself, something about them will always pop up in the conversation because they are the biggest reason why I am the way I am. I am still trying to find myself and I believe that as soon as I complete college, everything about me will be clear. For now, I am still a child at heart.
